Boston Winter brings ice skating, mazes and more to City Hall Plaza

Just in time for the holiday season. CHARLIE WOLFSON

After a successful debut in 2016, Boston Winter returns to City Hall Plaza just in time for the holiday season.

The outdoor attraction is set to open Friday, Nov. 24, which is perfect timing for those headed downtown to take care of some Black Friday shopping. Open to the public seven days a week, Boston Winter features a mix of seasonally appropriate activities, including a unique skating path and an expansive holiday shopping market.

The Berkshire Community Stage will also return this year, offering an opportunity for local artists and community groups to put their talents on display.

Mayor Marty Walsh said in a release that he's looking forward to the opening of Boston Winter at City Hall Plaza.

"Last year was an overwhelming success in showing the potential for City Hall Plaza to serve as a holiday destination," Walsh said. "From ice skating, to shopping, to enjoying local artists' performances, there is something for everyone at Boston Winter."

The holiday shopping market, which will remain open through Dec. 31, includes over 85 chalets, each offering a variety of local and international gifts, goods and food. Vendors include Grace Oliver, LovePop Cards and Abnormal Creations. In addition to shopping, visitors can check out an enchanted Christmas tree maze, a Santa House, a Bavarian Village and Vinopolis, plus an interactive wine and beer experience.

The skating path eschews the standard rectangular rink for a more festive, adventurous pathway that weaves around the Plaza. It'll operate through February. Feel free to rent skates there or bring your own.

Anthony Bourdain on why he's cool with craft beer and loves Boston's bar scene

"I like any excuse to come to Massachusetts."

MATT JUUL

Anthony Bourdain's latest travel gig involves a lot of whiskey and adventures with some of the nation's best craftspeople.

The "Parts Unknown" star has teamed up with Scotch whiskey makers Balvenie for "Raw Craft," a YouTube series that explores the dedication and commitment of those involved in the American craft movement.

Bourdain stopped by the Showcase SuperLux in Chestnut Hill last week for a special screening of "Raw Craft" involving Southbridge drum makers SJC Custom Drums. The company created a special instrument for Green Day drummer Tre Cool in the episode using wood from the Balvenie distillery in Scotland.

While Bourdain isn't sure if craft is making that big of a comeback in the U.S., he has nothing but respect for the work that these artisans do.

"I don't know if it's a movement, I hope it is, but I don't know," Bourdain told Metro after the event. "I don't think we're going to see a cobbler on every corner anytime soon or a blacksmith, as much as that might be awesome. I think that makes it all the more heroic when you see people like these doing what they do."

Here's what else Bourdain had to say about the craft movement, why he's fine with craft beer and what he loves about Boston's bar scene.

The word craft gets thrown around a lot. What does it mean to you?

You actually make stuff with your hands. Some actual, real artisanship in the old-school sense of the word. You learned from somebody who was an expert. You trained and you studied until you were good enough and you try to get better every day. It's not an artisanal potato chip made by a major corporation.

What do you think about all the hype over craft beer?

I don't know. Correct me if I'm wrong, when they first started, it was a pretty important thing. There is sort of that second-album syndrome. People say, "I used to really like it, until everyone else did." Look, good beer is good beer. I happen to like good beer, but I also like cold beer, easily accessible beer.

I think craft beer is a permissible use of the term, overused when it's a major corporation that controls a third of all beer production in a state and they set up a sort of fake craft brewery. That hurts a little, but there are a lot of people brewing small batch stuff and trying to make better and better product. While I may not want to listen to my bartender describe my beer for 12 minutes or make me feel bad about my beer choice if I don't go for their Mumford and Sons IPA, I think it's a good thing.

How much fun did you have filming the Massachusetts episode of "Raw Craft?"

I got to see Green Day. I've never seen Green Day before. I like music. I like any excuse to come to Massachusetts. I have a lot of history here. I just feel really comfortable in this state. I love it. I like coming to Boston. I tend to not make the shows that people want me to make when I come here, but I enjoy doing that as well.

What kind of shows aren't you making about Boston?

I've never come here and done "Boston's top 10 restaurants" or "hidden treasures of Boston." That's not what I do. I'm much more interested in these pockets that are uniquely, weirdly Bostonian that we just don't have and could never have in New York.

Where do you like to go when you're in town?

I like Southie. There was a bar we went to on the show. I don't think it's there anymore. It was built into a row house in Southie. It was incredible. A perfect bar is a rare and beautiful thing, and Boston has a good bunch of them, as well as a lot of really old school, dinosaur places that do old school s-t without any irony, which I like too.

Anthony Bourdain's strategy for Thanksgiving dinner and leftovers

As you can imagine, Thanksgiving is a pretty big deal in Anthony Bourdain's household.

The famed chef, author and host of CNN's "Parts Unknown" loves to go all out for the holiday and always plans an epic meal for Thanksgiving dinner. Bourdain revealed his Turkey Day strategy to Metro during his recent trip to Boston. "I deliberately plan," Bourdain says. "I cook Thanksgiving dinner. It's very traditional: turkey, stuffing, cranberry relish, gravy."

Aside from sticking to the basics on Thanksgiving, Bourdain likes to make sure that he has plenty of leftovers for his friends and family to take home.

"I always overproduce," Bourdain says. "I overproduce enough so everybody gets a take-home kit."

While the extra food is a nice treat for his guests,

Anthony Bourdain's favorite part about Thanksgiving is all the leftovers. istock

the culinary superstar likes to enjoy the spoils of Thanksgiving leftovers himself as well, usually "alone" and in the form of a turkey sandwich. According to Bourdain, he has a serious feast the next day that ends up being quite the sight to behold.

"I have a lot the next day, sitting there at like 11 o'clock in the morning watching TV on the couch in my pajamas eating," Bourdain says. "Maybe I warm it in the microwave. Maybe I won't. Maybe I'll just eat it cold."

Whether it's heated up or served right out of the refrigerator, Bourdain usually likes to take his extra stuffing and turkey and jam them onto a sandwich. Regardless of how it's prepared, though, the food and television star believes leftovers are the best part of the holiday.

"That is the true joy of Thanksgiving," Bourdain says. "It's all about the leftovers."

Unfortunately, if you're looking for tips on how to handle your annoying family members at Thanksgiving dinner, Bourdain doesn't really have any advice for you. Just don't get too crazy while drinking during the holiday.

"Thanksgiving drinking. I don't know," he says. "The murder rate spikes around the holidays drastically." MATT RIVA

Iliza Shlesinger on Harvey Weinstein and sexual harassment in comedy

The comedian is touring the country for her book "Girl Logic."

MATT JULI

Iliza Shlesinger is hitting the road this fall to promote her book, "Girl Logic: The Genius and the Absurdity." The comedian hopes her collection of essays will offer readers of both genders a glimpse into the female perspective, as well as dissuade folks from buying into many of the long-standing, negative stereotypes about women.

Ahead of her stop in Somerville on Saturday, we chatted with Shlesinger about her new book, the future of the entertainment industry after Harvey Weinstein and the prevalence of sexual harassment in the world of stand up.

Do you have any favorite Boston haunts from your time as an Emerson student?

It doesn't exist anymore, but across from Emerson, there was a bar called Flynn, and they would let us drink without IDs there. In college, that was definitely my favorite bar. Our campus was Boston Common, which is not the safest of places. I always thought Upper Crust Pizzeria in Beacon Hill [was great], so I'm going to go with those. Also, I partied a lot in college, so I can't really remember.

How would you define "Girl Logic," the title of your book?

While I was making my last Netflix special, "Confirmed Kills," I felt this real sense of obligation to stand up for women in a nonpreachy way and in a way that included men. I called it "digestible feminism." Rather than being angry, just explaining, "Here's why women think the way that we do. Here's why we're forced to think the way that we do because of these pressures that are on us." It's definitely geared toward girls, but if guys read it, they might come away from it understanding women a little bit better. I just grew so tired of the names applied to women and hearing that women are "crazy" or "psychos."

Are you hopeful about the entertainment industry's future in the wake of the Harvey Weinstein allegations?

We knew men like this existed. We didn't know, for this particular man, on that scale. I do think it gives predators a little bit of pause. But that being said, if you're that kind of guy, you have a mental problem. That can't be quelled with being shamed on the internet. The guy did a week treatment program. Big deal. The positive to take away from this is not so much about the predators doing it but more the victims realizing that you can say something. You can speak out.

In stand-up comedy, the amount of women I heard from was horrifying. Do you know how many women deal with this stuff on a nightly basis? Just horrible things or close to rape or just shaming women. You're told, "Oh, it's a boys' club. Tough it out." Ask any guy what it feels like to have like a gay guy look you up and down, they're like, "It feels so weird." Yeah, that's how we feel 24 hours a day.

What will shake out

If you go:

Nov. 25, 7:30 p.m., Arts at the Armory, 191 Highland St., Somerville, $39.50+, artsatthearmory.org of this are victims feeling less like it's their fault and hopefully feeling like they have someone to talk to.

Your guide to Black Friday deal-hunting

Who doesn't love a deal? Nobody. The satisfaction of saving a buck is second only to, well, getting something free. Black Friday, the annual blowout day of discounts on Friday, Nov. 24, provides an opportunity to get items on our wishlist, from laptops to peacoats to holiday gifts, for less — as long as we're smart about it. Whether you're braving the crowds to shop in-store or surfing deals online from your couch, we asked experts how to best take advantage this year. KATE MOONEY

Plan ahead

The first thing you should do is follow your favorite retailers on social media and sign up for their newsletters. That way, you'll hear about special discounts or sales as they're announced, says Sara Skirboll, shopping and trends expert at RetailMeNot, and avoid missing deals that are made available in the days leading up to Black Friday. To curb overspending, set a budget for yourself before you begin shopping. A good way to hold yourself accountable is by purchasing a discount gift card with the exact amount you can afford to spend, and if you're shopping in stores, leave your credit card at home.

If you shop in-store on Black Friday, get there early to cash in on the "early bird" deals. ISTOCK

Tips for shopping in-store

If you do head to the stores, get there early, as several of the doorbusters will be limited to early birds. Price-matching will be the secret to getting the best deal, says Certified Financial Planner and Business Insider's Money Editor Lauren Lyons Cole. Research online before you leave the house, and if you find a certain item listed at a cheaper price, ask the cashier if they'll match the price — in most cases, they will, she says. If you treat your deal-hunting like a competitive sport, Skirboll has some in-store tactics. "Start in the back of the store and work your way towards the front; moving in the opposite direction of the crowd gives you first access to some inventory," she coaches. She also suggests assembling a team of shoppers so you can divide and conquer and have more sets of eyes to scope out the selection. But if you can, leave the kids at home.

Tips for shopping online

Nowadays, many Black Friday deals online are just as good as in-store, and you may decide to avoid the crowds and do your shopping from the couch. If you do decide to surf the web for deals, be aware that prices fluctuate throughout the day. Money-saving expert Andrea Woroch suggests installing what's called the Invisible Hand browser extension, which will send you a notification if there's a better deal.

Maximize your deals with money-saving apps

Money-saving apps will be your deal-seeking friends this Black Friday. If shopping in-store, Woroch suggests downloading Shopkick, which earns you points you can then redeem for gift cards, while Swagbucks earns you cash back when you shop online.

'The Nutcracker'

The Boston Ballet returns with another glorious round of Tchaikovsky's "The Nutcracker." With its beautiful, instantly recognizable music and surreal, magical atmosphere, it's a one-of-a-kind treat for ears and eyes. Liam Gallagher

In Oasis, Liam and Noel Gallagher could seem like a two step process: Noel the manufacturer, writing all the music, and Liam the salesman, bringing that music to inimitable life. Perhaps that's why it took Liam longer than Noel to release a solo album, but "As You Were," which dropped in October, shows the younger Gallagher is far from bereft of his own manufacturing skills. Native Americans voice past and current struggles on National Day of Mourning

The tradition is marked annually in Plymouth, Massachusetts, with natives and non-natives coming from all over to stand in solidarity with indigenous people. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

The story of Thanksgiving is often presented as a heartwarming, welcoming tale in which Pilgrims and Native Americans came together to share crops, bonding over the feast.

But that story leaves out the struggles and horrors Natives faced at the hands of those colonists, their descendants argue. That's why every year, Native Americans and allies gather at Cole's Hill, above Plymouth Rock, where those Pilgrims first landed, for the National Day of Mourning.

An annual tradition since 1970, the National Day of Mourning is a time for Native American voices to truly be heard about both their ancestors' true histories and their community's current struggles, which are far too often silenced.

"Indigenous people give thanks all the time. We're not against giving thanks, and we're not against people having meals with their families," said Mahtowin Munro, co-leader of the United American Indians of New England (UAI NE), which organizes the day.

"The real underlying issue is this idea that the Pilgrims were so wonderful and amazing, that they came over and native people were happy to see them, and they all sat down together and live happily ever after," she continued. "And that then, native people just faded away."

While Native Americans are represented in our depictions of Thanksgiving, they're barely visible the rest of the year. While the Day of Mourning does address that buried history, it also serves as a time to talk about current issues indigenous people face.

Last year, a focus of the day was in solidarity with the water protectors at Standing Rock. This year, the 48th Day of Mourning, UAI NE wanted to give attention to those in Mexico, Puerto Rico and throughout the Caribbean who are still rebuilding their lives after devastating earthquakes and hurricanes.

"One of the things raised every year is that we didn't cross the border, the border crossed us. ... There were very severe earthquakes in Mexico, not only in Mexico City, but other areas with large indigenous populations, and we want to express solidarity [with] those people," Mahtowin said.

"With Puerto Rico and the Caribbean, that is the part of the world where [Christopher] Columbus and colonialism hit first," she added. "Because we've been colonized as a result of Europeans coming here, with our land taken from us, we certainly feel strong solidarity with them."

National Day of Mourning begins with an opening ceremony and blessing, followed by speeches and then a march down to Plymouth Rock and through the town, and the day ends with a potluck.

Last year, more than 1,000 people from across the country attended the National Day of Mourning, including natives and non-natives. To Mahtowin, it's an important day — not just to raise Native American voices and keep their history alive, but to show that everyone can come together when times are tough.

"We say that 'we cry from each other's eyes.' Even if it's not exactly my people and my struggle," she said. "I'm going to feel really grateful to be there with other Native people, and black people, Asian people, Arab people, white people, Latinx people, and to feel these struggles together and cry from each other's eyes. It's an important thing to unite us and help to heal us as human beings."

The 48th National Day of Mourning is Nov. 23, 2017 at noon on Cole's Hill, Plymouth, Massachusetts. Some groups are organizing buses to the event: From Boston, a bus will board at 284 Amory St. in Jamaica Plain; buy tickets here. From New York City, The International Action Center is sending a bus from 147 W. 24 St., 2nd floor, in Manhattan; get more information here. A bus is also leaving from 1685 Nostrand Ave. in Brooklyn; see here for details.

The Boston Common Christmas Tree arrives in style from Nova Scotia

The 2017 Boston Common Christmas Tree is the biggest one yet, at nearly five-stories tall. The giant spruce arrived from Nova Scotia on Tuesday, just in time for the holiday season.

The Boston Common Holiday Tree Lighting celebration is scheduled for Thursday, Nov. 30 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. near the Visitor Information Center on Tremont Street. The tree will be decorated with nearly 7,000 holiday lights, which will be turned on just before 8 p.m. that night. Shortly after its lighting, trees throughout the Common and Public Garden will also be lit. The annual event will wrap up with a fireworks display. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Paying for a ride on the T could look very different in three years

The MBTA is planning to overhaul its fare-collection system. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

The MBTA on Monday moved toward overhauling its fare collection system to eliminate cash from its trolleys and buses and to give riders the ability to pay onboard with a credit card or smartphone, changes the T says will help keep the transit system running on time.

The T's Fiscal and Management Control Board approved a 13-year, $723.3 million contract for the design, installation, finance, operation and maintenance of the "Automated Fare Collection 2.0" project Monday afternoon. The winning bidder was a joint venture between California-based Cubic Corp. and the John Laing Group, a British company.

When implementation is completed, projected for May 2020, T riders will be able to pay for their trip by loading a balance onto something similar to a Charlie Card, tapping a credit card on one of the new fare boxes or by purchasing a ticket on a smartphone app. Riders will no longer be able to pay with cash on buses or the Green Line, eliminating transactions that cause delays and frustration for other passengers.

"This isn't just about the next generation of fare collection, but an entirely new way that our customers learn to interact with the MBTA, with more options to pay, more fare media available for use which will have compatibility across all modes, including commuter rail and the ferries," MBTA General Manager Luis Ramirez said at Monday's FMCB meeting.

In addition to speeding up the trolley- and bus-boarding process, T officials said the new fare-collection method will open the doors to things like all-door boarding on buses and Green Line trolleys, improved revenue and ridership data, and would allow the MBTA to consider fare-policy innovations like distance- or time-based fares. It will also mean that T drivers will no longer have to also serve as fare collectors.

The shift away from cash transactions was flagged as a concern by some MBTA riders who said they are worried the new policies would negatively affect riders who don't use smartphones or credit cards and often rely on cash. Louise Baxter, of the T Riders Union, said the T needs to make the kiosks that will accept cash in exchange for a contactless card are close to bus stops and easy for riders to find.

Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack stressed Monday that riders will be able to pay for their MBTA rides with cash once the new system is in place, but they will have to do it before getting on a train or bus.

"This is not a cashless system. This is a system in which cash is not used onboard the vehicles anymore," Pollack said. "But cash will still be quite usable and easily usable by our customers who need to use cash."

David Block-Schachter, the MBTA's chief technology officer, said every fare kiosk or vending machine will accept cash and dispense cards, and riders will be able to pay with cash for MBTA fares at a "much more robust retail network." Some street-level bus and trolley stations could get small solar-powered kiosks, he said.

He also said the T is building the new system with the privacy of riders in mind. Data from the system that is "aggregated and depersonalized" will be used for service planning, but no rider will be able to be identified by that data.

A look back at the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade through the years

The annual event is one of the largest parades in the country. LENYON WHITAKER

The Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade takes place every year in the heart of New York City and marches more than 2 miles from 77th Street and Central Park West, ending at Macy's Herald Square located at 34th Street and Sixth Avenue. The parade celebrates the official start of the Christmas season.

The New York City Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade is considered to be the largest parade in the world, drawing over 3 million attendees and over 50 million watching the broadcast on TV or online. The parade has become a fun-filled family event and a Thanksgiving Day tradition.

Each year, Macy's introduces new floats and larger-than-life balloons to the parade while keeping the classics such as Ronald McDonald, Spiderman and various Sesame Street characters.

The Macy's parade began in 1924 but as you can imagine, it wasn't as big of a spectacle as it has become today. In the early 1920s, the official name of the parade was the "Macy's Christmas Parade."

The first parade was held to celebrate the grand opening of the Macy's flagship location at Herald Square. The celebrate the opening of the "World's Largest Store," the company decided to have a parade on Thanksgiving morning to honor the special occasion.

The main attractions of the first Macy's parade were animals borrowed from the Central Park Zoo. Elephants wearing large "Macy's" banners walked the parade route during the parade. It wasn't until 1928 that large helium balloons were used.

Despite the effects of the Great Depression, the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade grew larger and larger. By the early 1930s, about 1 million people were attending the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

As the years went on, the parade grew in size and popularity featuring more floats, balloons, marching bands and performances each year.

SIGNS & SYMPTOMS OF LIVER CANCER

Adult primary liver cancer is a disease in which malignant (cancer) cells form in the tissues of the liver.

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS of adult primary liver cancer include:

- A lump OR PAIN ON THE RIGHT SIDE
- Yellow and other signs and symptoms may be caused by ADULT PRIMARY LIVER CANCER or by other conditions.

Check with your doctor if you have any of the following:

- A hard lump on the right side (just below the rib cage)
- Discomfort in the upper abdomen on the right side
- A swollen abdomen
- Pain near the right shoulder blade or in the back
- General yellowing of the skin and whites of the eyes
- Easy bruising or bleeding
- Unusual tiredness or weakness
- Fever
- Itching and vomiting
- Loss of appetite or feelings of fullness after eating a small meal
- Weight loss for no known reason
- Fat, oily, brown, red, or dark urine

Signs and Symptoms of Liver Cancer

According to the American Cancer Society, liver cancer incidence has more than tripled since 1980. In the U.S., 40,710 people are projected to be diagnosed with primary liver cancer in 2017, causing an estimated 28,920 deaths. Dana-Farber Cancer Institute wants you to know the signs and symptoms of liver cancer.

Primary liver cancer is cancer that forms in the tissues of the liver. Secondary liver cancer is cancer that spreads to the liver from another part of the body. Most liver cancer is secondary or metastatic.

Primary liver cancer, which starts in the liver, accounts for about 2 percent of cancers in the U.S., but up to half of all cancers in some developing countries. This is largely due to the prevalence of hepatitis, which predisposes a person to liver cancer. In the U.S., primary liver cancer strikes twice as many men as women, at the average age of 67.

The liver is one of the largest organs in the body. It has four lobes and fills the upper right side of the abdomen inside the rib cage.

Three of the many important functions of the liver are:

- To filter harmful substances from the blood so they can be passed from the body in stools and urine.
- To make bile to help digest fat that comes from food.
- To store glycogen (sugar), which the body uses for energy.

The following are risk factors for adult primary liver cancer:

- Having hepatitis B or hepatitis C. Having both hepatitis B and hepatitis C increases the risk even more.
- Having cirrhosis, which can be caused by hepatitis (especially hepatitis C), drinking large amounts of alcohol for many years, or being an alcoholic.
- Having metabolic syndrome, a set of conditions that occur together, including extra fat around the abdomen, high blood sugar, high blood pressure, high levels of triglycerides and low levels of high-density lipoproteins in the blood.
- Having liver injury that is long-lasting, especially if it leads to cirrhosis.
- Having hemochromatosis, a condition in which the body takes up and stores more iron than it needs. The extra iron is stored in the liver, heart, and pancreas.
- Eating foods tainted with aflatoxin (poison from a fungus that can grow on foods, such as grains and nuts, that have not been stored properly).

Holidays, in their purest form, are about spending time with loved ones — family, friends, and, if you're a pet owner, your furry dependents. But large gatherings can prove difficult for dogs, who get overly excited by all the new people and, during Thanksgiving especially, the smells of so many tasty eats. (Honestly, same.)

There are steps you can take to keep your pup calm and comfortable during the holiday, though, as opposed to barking like crazy as each guest arrives or obsessively begging for table turkey scraps. Dog trainer Annie Grossman, founder of School for the Dogs in Manhattan, gives us practical tips for taming your beast at the feast.

Keep him busy with "work-to-eat toys"

Grossman is a fan of what she calls "work-to-eat toys," products like Kongs, Toppls, slow food bowls or Buster mazes, which conceal treats your dog has to dig out, or contain obstacles it has to navigate to get to the food. (You can even make your own, Grossman suggests: Fill an empty ice cube tray with kibble, or put food inside two plastic cups and fit them together.)

Dog trainer
Annie Grossman
and her pup Amos.
MILEA CHAPPELL

Giving your dog these tasty toys during the Thanksgiving meal will keep her entertained and less likely to badger guests at the table for handouts. As a break from the same tired dry food, fill the toys with Thanksgiving scraps, which contain plenty of dog-friendly eats like turkey, yams, potatoes, and string beans.

Make the floor the focus

Whether you're hosting the meal or you're a guest at someone's house, establish a designated place for your dog, be it a crate, dog bed or a towel on the floor, to keep her from overwhelming guests.

"You want them to have a spot where [they know] good things are going to happen," Grossman explains. Make that positive association by giving him treats or praise while he's sitting in his spot. Encourage your guests to approach your dog if they want to say hi, rather than waiting for the dog to greet them.

Distract her from the doorbell

If your dog is the type to go nuts when guests come to the door, barking at the bell and jumping up on them when they enter, Grossman has a tip for diverting her attention using the Treat & Train, a remote-control operated treat dispenser that works at a distance of 50 feet. Set it up far from the door, and as your guests arrive, trigger the remote control to release a treat. Although it's a bit pricey, "it's a great way to keep a dog in one spot without having to tend to them constantly," she explains.

BE THANKFUL FOR THESE DUDES

The holidays are upon us, and I'm feeling awfully grateful during this Thanksgiving week. So I thought I'd let you in on a few people I'm thankful for in the sports world these days.

My list is long, but allow me to narrow it down to the top five for you. Hope I don't sound too spoiled:

1. Brady and Bill

Who in New England would ever open this list with anyone else? As long as these two are running the ship, there is nothing that can sink it. There was a time in which some people in this town used Jimmy Garoppolo's presence as a way to question Brady's future. I was not one of those people. The Brady and Belichick duo is a once-in-a-lifetime partnership, and I'd like to see them stick together as long as possible. Because regardless of who their replacements are, it's never going to get better than this.

2. Danny Ainge

I could've easily added Kyrie Irving and Brad Stevens to this one. That's not to say I'm not thankful for Irving and Stevens. It's just that, Ainge is the one who brought them to Boston. As I write this, the Celtics have won 16 straight after defeating the Mavericks in Dallas on Monday night. I had a feeling the C's would have plenty of success without Gordon Hayward, but this is incredible. Credit Irving — who's one of the best players in the league — and Stevens — who's once again built a never-give-up identity with his roster — for being on the same page and leading the Celtics to this type of dominance. But more credit goes to Ainge, who's been in the kitchen cooking the dinner this whole time.

3. Rafael Devers

Consider the Red Sox' third baseman off-limits in any potential blockbuster trades this offseason. Devers turned 21 in October, and after making his MLB debut in 2017, it's safe to say he's going to be a stud, if he isn't already. I'll trade the prospects for the sure thing any day of the week, but seeing Devers hit .284 with 10 home runs and 30 RBI in 58 games this year, I no longer consider him a "prospect." Devers was arguably the Red Sox' best player in the postseason, hitting .364 with two home runs and five RBI in four games of the ALDS against the eventual World Series champion Houston

Astros. He wasn't fazed by the big stage and should be somebody that all of us in Boston will be thankful for, for years to come.

4. Steve Kerr

The Golden State Warriors coach took the words out of my mouth earlier in the week, when he was asked about the back-and-forth between President Trump and LaVar Ball.

"Two people seeking attention, and they're both getting it," said Kerr to a group of reporters. "I'm sure both guys are really happy."

"You know what would help, if all of you just stopped covering both of them. Is that possible? You can probably stop covering LaVar. I don't think you can stop covering the President. I don't think that will work. It would be nice for all us if both of them would just be quiet. Wouldn't that be great?"

5. Deion Sanders

The Hall-of-Fame cornerback had an unbelievable response to former Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo, after Romo knocked Sanders' tackling ability during the CBS broadcast of Cowboys/Chiefs in Week 9.

"Ten years as a starter, you're 2-4 in the playoffs," said Sanders on NFL Network. "You ain't won nothing."

"Tony, what's going on man? I got a gold jacket that I didn't buy. Dak says hi, and bye. Tony, leave me alone man. I got a lot of ammunition man. How many interceptions? Nineteen in 2012? Come on man, you threw to everybody but me. Tony, come on man. You know you never won the big one, you know you never won the big one."

Thanksgiving Day football betting guide

NFL fans and bettors will be able to feast on three games this Thanksgiving.

Vikings (-3) at Lions

The Vikings hope to turn the tables on Thanksgiving Day after a 14-7 loss to the Lions on Oct. 1 in which they atypically committed three turnovers. Minnesota hasn't lost a game since (6-0) and has covered in each of its last five contests.

The Lions have had a hard time going toe-to-toe with the cream of the NFL crop since beating the Vikings. Prior to their current three-game winning streak over the Packers, Browns and Bears, Detroit dropped three straight to the Panthers, Saints and Steelers. Ameer Abdullah rushed for 94 yards against Minnesota (second in rushing defense) on Oct.

1 but that may not happen again as he hasn't sniffed that number in six games since. The pick: Vikings -3

Chargers at Cowboys (E)

The Cowboys have been trounced in back-to-back weeks and draw a tough matchup with the Chargers on Thursday afternoon.

Dak Prescott has been rendered ineffective without left tackle Tyron Smith protecting his blind spot. Smith is unlikely to be 100 percent even if he does play on Thanksgiving, which could spell trouble for Prescott as he faces the NFL's third-ranked pass rush. The Cowboys have been getting ground gains in two weeks without Ezekiel Elliott and face the Chargers' league-worst run-stopping unit but need to be able to pass the ball effectively.

L.A. has covered in five of its last six tilts after making mincemeat of Nathan Peterman and the Bills on Sunday. Philip Rivers should be able to pick apart a Dallas defense that has sorely missed linebacker Sean Lee and safety Jeff Heath. The pick: Chargers E

Giants at Redskins (-7.5)

The Redskins have been victims of a ridiculously-tough schedule of late but finally get some relief facing the bottom-feeding Giants.

New York's defense showed it still had some fire on Sunday as it smothered the fading Chiefs, but will have to deal with Kirk Cousins, who's hit the 300-yard mark in two straight contests. Cousins should have plenty of time to find his targets downfield against the moribund Giants' pass rush.

The pick: Redskins -7.5

3 Things to watch for as Pats host Dolphins

AFC Least

Just prior to Halloween, it looked like the Miami Dolphins were going to pose a legit threat to dethrone the Patriots in the AFC East. The week of Oct. 23, the Dolphins were riding high at 4-2. Since then Miami has lost four straight - 40-0 to Baltimore, 27-24 to Oakland, 45-21 to Carolina and 30-20 to Tampa Bay. The Patriots will now see the sinking Dolphins twice over the next two weeks, the first game coming this Sunday at Gillette and the next coming on Monday Night Football in Miami on Dec. 11. The old narrative is that the Pats typically struggle with the Dolphins no matter how bad they are, but that's not exactly true anymore. The Pats are 11-3 against the Dolphins since 2010.

Miami 'Meh'

The Dolphins defense has big names like Ndamukong Suh, Cameron Wake and Kiko Alonso — but Miami is a paper champion. The Dolphins defense is allowing 25.4 points per game this season which is 25th in the NFL. They are 17th in the NFL in passing yards allowed per game (229.3) and 14th in the NFL in rushing yards allowed per game (109.9). Gotta think Tom Brady and the Pats will be able to score over 30 points for the third straight week.

WEEK 12

Sunday at 1 p.m. on CBS

Moore mediocrity

Dolphins starting QB Jay Cutler will likely miss this Sunday's game against the Pats as he was placed in the NFL concussion protocol after the team's loss to the Buccaneers last Sunday. That might not necessarily be a bad thing for the Dolphins, who have actually performed a tad better with Matt Moore taking snaps. In relief of Cutler last Sunday, Moore completed 17-of-28 passes for 282 yards, a touchdown and zero picks. He finished the game with a passer rating of 106.5. That said, don't expect Moore to be whipping TD passes this Sunday in Foxboro. The Patriots defense has not allowed a team to score more than 17 points against them in each of the past six games. MATT BURKE
